

CENTURION

Fall 2005

THE PASSIONATE SHOPPER

THINGS EXTREME

The Sound

Movie fans already appreciate how surround sound technologies like Dolby, THX, and DTS enhance the big picture. Now the Marantz SR9600 audio/video receiver brings all these technologies home. It amplifies movie sound tracks by sending 140 watts of power to as many as seven sets of speakers—plenty of sonic muscle for wall-shaking sound. Plus, the complex computer chip and built-in microphone allow the system to sample any room's acoustics then optimize sound settings to suit its dimensions. The 57-pound receiver can also transmit separate audio signals to two additional rooms so that others, if not interested in what's onscreen, can tune out the film and tune in to a CD instead. The Marantz SR9600 is $4,200. Centurion members wanting information on dealers should visit www.marantz.com.

By Frank Vizard | Photograph by Geoffrey Sokol